

OBJECTIVES

Students will be able to create a list of fifteen tactics based on what they have learned about tactics.

DESCRIPTION

Tactics are how characters get what they want from other people onstage. They are verbs used to describe how a character behaves to get others to do what they want. In this lesson, students will learn what tactics are and create a list of possible tactics.

INSTRUCTION

1. Introduction:

Introduction/warmup

Think of something you want from two different people in the class. It can be anything (shoes, sunglasses, homework, friendship).

Think of two different things you want from two different people.

-Go talk to classmates and get what you want.

* You cannot just ask for what you want. Find other ways of getting what you want instead of asking for it.

2. Discussion:

-Did you get what you want?

-How did you succeed?

-return objects obtained.

3. What is a Tactic?:

All the methods used to get what you wanted are called tactics. Characters use them onstage to get what they want from other characters.

Tactics are always verbs, action words that describe a character's behavior. So, forcing someone to give up their shoes or begging someone for their lunch money or coaxing someone to give you help on your homework are all tactics.

4. Real Life Connections:

-We use tactics all the time.

-When students want me to change their grades, they beg, coax, guilt-trip, manipulate, and occasionally threaten to get what they want.

-When I want my students to stop talking, I may plead, threaten, or persuade them to get them to stop talking.

- Ask for examples of how you try to get things from your friends, teachers, or parents. All of these things are tactics. Can you repeat the same tactic over and over again, or do you have to change tactics?

5. Modeling:

Give several examples of situations. Have students suggest tactics they might try to get what they want.

- You want your mom to let you borrow the car.
- You want your friend to loan you money.
- You want your teacher to change your grade.
- You want your sister to do your chores.
- You want your dad to buy you a new phone.

6. Assignment:

Students can do this individually or in small groups. Ask them to create a list of 15 different tactics. Remind them that tactics are verbs (action words). Encourage students to think about life situations where they have wanted something from someone and what they did to get it.

7. Have each group pick their favorite three tactics and share them with the class.

8. EXERCISE 1 :

-One student leaves the room.

-Two volunteers

- *Give them a location and a relationship.
- *Choose one tactic from the list of tactics just made.
- *Have the person in the hall come back in.
- *The two students with location and relationship act scene using tactic the class chose.
- *Keep going until the first person guesses the tactic.

9. EXERCISE 2 :

-Groups of two.

-Decide what they want from their partner.

-Create a scene where they are both trying to get what they want.

-Apply three tactics during each scene.

POSSIBLE SCENE IDEAS:

- One partner wants a ride to school and the other wants to copy their partner's homework.
- One wants their partner to buy them lunch. The other wants advice on relationship problems.
- One partner wants to borrow the car and the other wants their partner to clean their room.
- One wants to ask the other on a date, the other wants help cheating on a test.
- One wants their partner to lend them money, the other wants to ask their partner on a date.
- One wants their partner to help choose a prom dress. Other wants advice on parent's divorce.

-Perform scenes and have audience identify what tactics they used.

ASSIGNMENT CHECKLIST

- Students hand in their list of 15 tactics
- Did you create a list of fifteen tactics?
- Are all of your tactics verbs?

ASSESSMENT

The assessment will grade the tactic list that students turn in. If they list fifteen tactics that are all verbs, they will be successful on the assessment.
